Customer Reviews

PreS-Gr 1 – When reading this German import, one can't help but notice the similarity in style to the classic books by Richard Scarry. In each of the three sections, children can search for pesky Benny Badger. There is no specific plot or story line. Rather, the overarching theme is time as depicted by the clock at the top of each verso. Older readers can observe and compare what happens in the various sections at 6:00 am, 9:00 am, noon, 3:00 pm, 5:00 pm, 7:00 pm, and 9:00 pm. Under the clocks are questions such as "What is Bailey Bear doing?" Children find the answers by studying the page of labeled characters before each section, scrutinizing the spread, and creating their own stories. Cartoonlike artwork attempts to create interest for those who relish the Waldo-type "seek and find" books. However, these animal characters lack charming or endearing qualities, and the book does not blaze any new trails. Strictly supplementary. —Blair Christolon, Prince William Public Library System, Manassas, VA

This attractive book offers crowded yet pleasing scenes in which dressed animals engage in everyday human activities. The large-format volume is divided into three sections, originally published as separate titles in Germany. Each shows a single location at seven different times of day, indicated by a clock in one corner. In each section, the first page introduces the characters, small figures identified by their names and sometimes grouped into families. The next page introduces the location (town, farm, or dockside scene) that is reproduced on the seven broad double-page spreads that follow. A few questions prompt kids to search for certain characters, such as Benny Badger, a petty thief appearing in every scene. Reminiscent of Richard Scarry's Busytown books, Martin Handford's Where's Waldo? series, and Jean Marzollo's I Spy series, the book will captivate the same audience with its inviting, intricate illustrations, which appear to be digital collages. A treasure trove for kids who love a visual challenge. Preschool-Grade 1. --Carolyn Phelan

Beautiful illustrations, wonderful concept. Hours of entertainment for young imaginations. Our 3-year-old received this book two years ago from a friend and has loved it to death. Seriously. We tried to be gentle but I've had to glue and tape it back together several times. The characters are so fun and she loves to describe their adventures through the different scenes throughout the days. I recently bought this for another young friend to enjoy. Highly recommended!! We've enjoyed all the Britta Teckentrup books we've found. If you enjoy this artistic storytelling without words style of book, check out the Mamoko books, too.

My 3 year old loves this book. As other reviewers have noted, Busy Bunny Days is similar to Richard Scarry's Busytown books. Britta shows a setting--town, farm, port--at different points of time during the day, from 6:00 am to 9:00 pm. Children are introduced to many characters and events as the day progresses. My favorite scene was the port--so much to see, vibrant colors and modern illustrations. Beautiful!

This book is perfect for any age. We got it for my daughter when she turned 2 and definitely still loving to look at it at 3.5. So much going on with each page, she loves looking for all the characters, following the changes with time of day, or seeing what silly Benny badger is up to. A regular appearance on our gift list.

I love this book and can see it being a favorite of young ones and their parents over a span of years. Britta Teckentrup's illustrations just shine in this book. As a child grows, there is more and more that one can do interactively with this book. Concept is much like that of Richard Scarry but brings a different quality and class to that genre of children's books. Highly recommend this book.

Such a cute book! My 4 and 6.5 year olds sit and look at the pictures to find all the animals and like to sit and talk about what the characters are doing. Has different scenes...farm, country, city...adorable!

My kids LOVE this book! They are 2 and 4 and both really enjoy it.

My kids (ages 4 and 2) love this book.

Love the book! Hours and hours of entertainment!
